

How this guide works

Last Updated : 21/07/25

This information guide will help you get to know the top 14 allergens declarable by law which are present in our food.

Allergens

If you have an allergy, head to the till to order and please speak to the manager on duty, so that extra precautions can be taken during preparation.

We declare allergens that are intentionally added to product and, where our suppliers have indicated possible cross contamination risks, we declare these too.

Our food and drink are however, prepared to order in a busy kitchen where allergens are also present, and equipment is shared.

The following allergens are handled in our kitchens – celery, Cereals Containing Gluten, Gluten, eggs, fish, milk, mustard, nuts, sesame, soya and sulphites and we cannot guarantee the product is free from these additional allergens due to possible cross-contamination.

Contains

Allergens are present within the product.

May contain

Traces of allergen may be present from our supplier and cannot be removed from the product.

Further Information

We declare which ingredient within the dish contains the allergen.

Vegetarian & Plant-based

Although our restaurants aren't vegetarian, our kitchens aim to keep non-meat products separate from meat products - but we can't guarantee it. Please speak to the manager for more information on how your meal will be prepared.

Plant-based and vegetarian products are cooked on the same grills as ingredients derived from animal origin.

Where we make a dietary claim regarding any menu items that are suitable for those following a plant-based diet, please be aware that this is applicable to the recipe only and cannot be used solely as assurance that there is no risk of cross contamination with allergenic ingredients, such as milk and egg.

Vegetarian

Plant-based

Please always be sure to check the full recipe breakdown for full ingredients and allergen information.
